

Treye Rosenberger, Ph.D., CRC, LMHC, NCC

In my studies and practice, I am reminded that as a CRC, I must combat discrimination and the segregation of people with disabilities, which has been the goal of rehabilitation counselors for decades. A CRC demonstrates that I can educate the public about disability, disability rights advocacy and combat negative attitudes toward individuals with disabilities.

In my role as a professor with a CRC, I can integrate disability knowledge into the classroom to better service professional counselors in training as they serve individuals with disabilities regardless of their counseling discipline. I can demonstrate to students how to help individuals who have disabilities set and achieve their goals.
